

The DDM (MainWindow) class is designed to be reactive besides the initial handshake which it initiates. It can take messages in any order. Messages are processed based on an identifier provided by the controller. readSerialData() is called to identify the type of message and pass its content off to the appropriate processing function. Any time the event class is updated, an auto saved log file is also updated to match.